Piketon Plant Future Discussed

Ohio University is conducting a survey to see what the public thinks about the future of the plant
Tuesday, January 18, 2011

As the demolition and decontamination cleanup process continues at the gaseous diffusion plant in Piketon, the future of the site remains a debated discussion around southern Ohio.

Recently, the U.S. Department of Energy awarded a grant to Ohio University to conduct a community involvement process to develop visions for what the plant should become. So far in the process they have conducted a survey of one thousand randomly selected people across the four counties of Ross, Pike, Scioto and Jackson asking them what they would like to see from the former enrichment plant. The survey data hasn't been fully analyzed yet, but early indications show that the majority of people have one idea in common-Jobs.

Scott Miller Director of Energy and Environmental Programs at Ohio University says the next step in this process is to organize a committee to develop multiple visions for the site. For those interested in the project or becoming a committee member there is a kickoff meeting at the PACCAR Center in Chillicothe on the evening of March 15th.
